Biography

Mark Peters joined the Advanced Manufacturing Growth Centre (AMGC) in 2017 and is the State Director, Queensland and Northern Territory and is based near Brisbane.

Mark's role is to support Queensland and Northern Territory manufacturers to transform their business to become more globally competitive. Under Mark's leadership, manufactures are encouraged to automate their manufacturing processes and enter global supply chains. He helps companies deliver greater commercial outcomes through strong collaboration with research institutions and lift skills across management and the workplace.

In addition, Mark is keen to encourage more manufacturing jobs back to Australia. Known as 'reshoring', Mark leads a consortium of like-minded manufacturers exploring ways to create jobs locally through the uptake of technology and the sharing of work orders across state borders.

Mark also evaluates CRC applications that involve advanced manufacturing elements. This is to ensure continuity on government funded programs and alignment toward a common goal of lifting manufacturing skills and adoption of advanced characteristics.

Previously, Mark worked as a Business Advisor as part of the Entrepreneurs' Programme. He has worked with hundreds of firms covering diverse industries, such as, manufacturing, resources, agriculture, medical and transport. He helped these firms successfully focus on their sales model including distribution channels and new business development.

Mark has a commercial background as a CEO with companies in the process control and motion control industries. He is now particularly interested in the advantages of robotics and 3D printing technology for Australian manufacturers.

Mark is a certified practicing accountant and is a graduate of the Australian Institute of Company Directors. He holds a diploma in Corporate Management and is Cert IV in Training and Assessment.
